THE ROYAL HOUSE OF STUART

Alessandra:

Today... we are not simply telling a story. We are witnessing something history rarely allows: a legacy that refuses to remain in the past. And today... one man stepped forward and say that story is not over. Please welcome... Prince Bruce Stuart.

HM Bruce:

Thank you for having us.

Alessandra:

Bruce, how are you?

HM Bruce:

I'm good, you?..

Alessandra:

Nice... How would you introduce yourself to the world for the very first time? Because you carried the blood of powerful kings and queens like your ancestors, Robert the Bruce and Mary Stuart. So tell me, when you look in the mirror, do you see a king or just a man carrying the crushing weight of history?

HM Bruce:

To be honest, when I look in the mirror, I only see Bruce. I am a husband, and I love my country. At home, I do not ask anyone to call me King. But you are right, history is heavy. But I do not see it as a burden. I see it as a guide. Knowing I come from Robert the Bruce changes how I look at the future. It reminds me that my life is not just about me. I am simply a man who remembers his duty to his people.

Alessandra:

That realization of duty... Do you remember the exact moment you first discovered your connection to the Stuart lineage? What changed in your life that day?

HM Bruce:

It all started in 2019. Out of nowhere, three people arrived from England, sent directly by the late Queen Elizabeth the second. They sat down with me and explained everything step by step—who I really was and the truth about my family background.

My life before that day and the reality they showed me were completely different. Honestly, like anyone else, my first thought was that it was a hidden camera prank. It just felt too crazy to be real.

They told me that I was going to meet the late Queen Elizabeth. I was told to get myself ready. I understood that this was not a request, but a direct command.

THE ROYAL HOUSE OF STUART

Alessandra:

A summons of that magnitude... that would change anyone's perspective of their own life.

HM Bruce:

It was a huge change for me. They guided me through the rules—how to address the Queen, how to speak, and how to carry myself with respect. It wasn't really about learning something new. It felt more like waking up a past that had been hidden for a long time.

When they came back, the small talk was over. They started preparing me for my online meeting with the Queen—specifically, how to address and speak with her.

Alessandra:

And when the screen finally came on?

HM Bruce:

The call started. The moment Her Majesty appeared, all my doubts were gone. Her presence—even through a screen—was undeniable. We looked right at each other. In that instant, I wasn't just a regular citizen anymore. I was a Prince. It was the confirmation I needed.

It was a long conversation, lasting nearly 45 minutes. She explained who I really was, details of my past that were kept hidden, and the duties I now carry. She spoke not just about the past, but about what must be done for my people.

I should add that these meetings—every single one of them—were carefully recorded. They are not just personal memories; they are historical proof. I plan to share them with the public when the time is right. But we have a more important duty right now. My focus, and the focus of the House of Stuart, is not on the past. It is about the future of Scotland.

Alessandra:

Bruce, under the shadow of this immense historical heritage, what kind of modern leader are you becoming?

HM Bruce:

A leader who listens. History gives me a foundation, but my leadership must be based on today's reality.

I am becoming a leader who values openness and understanding over absolute power.

A modern King shouldn't be out of reach; he should serve the nation's potential.

THE ROYAL HOUSE OF STUART

Alessandra:

So Bruce, how do you mathematically and historically define your direct blood connection to the Stuart line for the international public?

HM Bruce:

My connection to the Stuart line wasn't based on a guess; it was proven by science with a DNA test ordered by the Queen herself. When the team came for our second online meeting, they were there to take the samples for DNA. I remember looking at them and asking Her Majesty a direct question: "If you already know who I am, and you're telling me I am to be King, why do you need a DNA test? Do you have doubts about who I am?" She answered right away. She told me the test wasn't for her—she had zero doubts. She explained it was needed for the future. It had to be done, recorded, and ready for the day the truth came out. In short, it was about preparing the world for the reality of my bloodline.

Alessandra:

Mainstream history books state that the House of Stuart officially ended in 1807 with the death of Cardinal Henry Benedict Stuart. Bruce, how do you explain to the world that these history books are wrong?

HM Bruce:

You have to understand that what we call "history" is often just a reflection of politics back then. Unfortunately, not every truth gets in the textbooks. To me, it is clear that the British leaders back then found it useful to convince the public that the Stuart line was over. They needed to secure a new order, and declaring the Stuart line dead was a powerful way to protect that order. But politics and biological facts are two very different things. A dynasty doesn't just vanish because a government decides it's easier to close the book. It just moves into the shadows, kept safe by those who honor the bloodline, until the right time to return.

Alessandra:

Are there historians supporting your claim? How do you respond to criticism of historical accuracy?

HM Bruce:

I have no doubt that many historians will challenge what we are saying today. But let me be very clear: I am not here to fight with historians, or sit down with the Buckingham Palace to prove my rights. I believe the word of the late Queen Elizabeth, who ruled for 70 years, along with clear DNA proof, leaves no doubt. If anyone still doubts Her Majesty's recognition of who I am, I have nothing more to say to them. I am not here to fight over the past; I am here to serve the future. My goal is to win freedom for my country and my people, the freedom they have long deserved. As the new King of Scots, I am not here to live in history books—I am here to protect and serve my people.

THE ROYAL HOUSE OF STUART

Alessandra:

To be absolutely clear, Bruce: are you making a formal claim to the Scottish throne as of today?

HM Bruce:

No. I don't claim the throne. It is already mine, and it belongs to the people of Scotland.

A King does not need to prove who he is. If anyone thinks I am wrong, they must prove it. We aren't here to play by the old rules. We are here to start something new—to bring back the freedom we lost. I don't care if the world calls me King. My job is only to build the future my people deserve.

Alessandra:

To clarify for the public: are we looking at a restoration of the old order, or are you proposing something entirely different?

HM Bruce:

*Absolutely a new system, a new system.. I am not bringing back the past. I am building a new system for Scotland. Under our system, Scottish politicians will no longer pledge loyalty to the Crown just to serve the institution. From today on, their loyalty belongs to the Crown and to the people. Above all, to serve the Crown is to serve the people. *The Scottish Parliament must speak for the people. But if they ever betray this nation or turn against its citizens, the Crown will not just sit and watch. I will step in to protect our people, making sure their voices are never again silenced by a political agenda.

Alessandra:

Bruce, let us speak to the reality of the situation. What if Scotland, or the current establishment, rejects your claim? How do you measure, and how do you define, the public support you have?

HM Bruce:

Support isn't about opinion polls; it is seen in loyalty. Over the last seven years, with the help of the late Queen before her passing and her team, we built our foundation. I have nine Loyal Scottish Lords, a strong group of Scottish Members of Parliament, and most importantly, three million Scots behind us. As of today, they are ready for this new monarchy. For over three centuries, my country and my people have lived under the weight of an outside power. We have our own history, our own flag, and our own land—yet we have never been truly free. The British monarchy presents itself as a champion of freedom, yet for centuries, they have occupied our land and held down our people. That occupation ends today. If the British Monarchy and Government truly believe in the freedom they speak of, let them prove it now by honoring the will of my people.

Alessandra:

Bruce, for the world watching, this is the real question: Is Scotland truly independent today? What about a referendum? And if London rejects this—what happens then?

THE ROYAL HOUSE OF STUART

HM Bruce:

Scotland is independent as of today. There is no doubt about it. This morning, my legal team sent official notices to world leaders and international courts. These documents will be made public today, and our independence will be honored without question.

As for London opposition: the King and Parliament have no authority over Scotland. None at all. This is proven, point by point, in our documents. Let me be clear: we do not need permission from London for our freedom. Everything you've been told until now was politicians lying to my people. The truth is right here in our letters.

Alessandra:

The world is wondering: what will be the reaction of the House of Windsor to this declaration? Are we on the brink of a constitutional crisis?

HM Bruce:

Ohh.. Absolutely not. Our goal is not war with England or the Monarchy. If we wanted a fight, I would have done exactly what Robert the Bruce did. But that is not our path. We have chosen diplomacy. Today, we declare our independence to the world in a peaceful, lawful way.

I believe the Monarchy—and the people of England—will respect the memory of Queen Elizabeth... We choose peace, and we expect the same in return.

Alessandra:

Bruce, to be direct: What is your view of King Charles III? Are you in opposition to the House of Windsor, or are you acting in parallel to it?

HM Bruce:

My cousin King Charles is the ruler of England. That is his land, and I have no interest in his crown. But let me be clear: Scotland is not his. He is not our King.

I stand for my people. We are not enemies. We are not fighting for the same throne. I am the King of Scots, and my duty is to serve my country. The days of British monarchs ruling Scotland are over.

I am not here to challenge his throne in England; I am here to declare Scotland's freedom. We are neighbors. Two separate nations. And as one king to another, I expect him to respect the will of my people.

Alessandra:

Have you contacted Buckingham Palace? What response did you receive?

HM Bruce:

Of course I did. I wrote to King Charles twice since he took the throne. I also sent letters to Prince William and Princess Anne. I didn't expect a response, because I didn't ask questions. I simply told them who I am, and how Scotland will take its freedom. This was not a request. It was a fact. I made sure the truth was known.

THE ROYAL HOUSE OF STUART

Alessandra:

Are you not afraid that they will take this power away from you?

HM Bruce:

Power is not given; it is taken. And I already have it.

Alessandra:

Would you meet King Charles III if invited?

HM Bruce:

Why not? We are cousins. If he invites me, our meeting will be purely diplomatic. We would likely sit down and watch my video calls with the late Queen. Like I said, in those calls, Her Majesty shared a lot about the their Royal Family's past. I am sure Charles would be surprised to see them. I want him to see the footage before I share it with the world. It contains sensitive things about his House. It is only right that he sees it first.

Alessandra:

We have touched upon history, legacy, and a future that feels closer than ever. Whether the world is ready or not, the conversation has begun. Thank you both for being here.

THE ROYAL HOUSE OF STUART

FINAL SPEECH — HM BRUCE THE SECOND, KING OF SCOTS

My first message to the international press. I know your main focus right now is me—and the future of our kingdom. But for the sake of my people, do not trust unofficial sources. Anything official will come directly from my voice, or my office. If you want the truth, ask us directly.

To the Noble Clans of Scotland.. Today, three centuries of British rule are over. Scotland is an independent kingdom once more.

My call to you is simple: We are restoring the Scottish House of Lords under the House of Stuart—to serve our people and protect our traditions. So that every clan has a voice, I ask each of you to choose a Lord to stand with us.

World Leaders, Monarchs, the United Nations, and the Vatican:

I stand here today to restore what was taken from us. British laws cannot bypass international law, nor hide the truth of our Royal House. The 1707 Act of Union was an agreement between two free nations. That promise was broken. And when a promise is broken, the injured nation has every right to take its freedom back. My bloodline was recognized by the late Queen Elizabeth and proven by science. This is a truth no state can deny.

I appeal to your honor: You have defended the freedom of many nations. Now, show that same spirit for Scotland. Look past short-term politics. History will judge you by your loyalty to justice. Recognizing Scotland is not a political favor—it is doing what is right.

To the world: This is not an internal fight; it is a matter of international justice. The right to self-rule never dies. We are not inventing a new country—we are restoring our Kingdom.

Stand for the law, not political comfort. Recognize Scotland's freedom, and the return of the House of Stuart.

THE ROYAL HOUSE OF STUART

My cousin, King Charles, we both know that history is not just a group of stories, but a record of truths that always come back in the end. The power of a Crown is not kept alive by local laws, but by royal blood, legal rights, and the choice of the people—things that have been ignored for a long time.

You are a man of tradition, and you know very well that titles and thrones are held in trust. But when that trust is built on a broken international agreement and taking away the rights of the House of Stuart, that trust ends. The official statement from the late Queen Elizabeth II was not just an empty action; it was accepting a real, proven truth that cannot be hidden anymore.

I am not coming to you to ask for a favor or a political deal. I am here to finish bringing back an order that was wrongly taken. The time of silence about Scotland's rights is over. This is The Return of the Kingdom of Scotland. I ask you to see this not as a personal problem, but as fixing a mistake of history. The honor of our shared family line and the future of Scotland depend on the strength to face the truth of who we are.

King Charles, a true King's highest duty is to serve his people, honor their will, and protect their freedom. If you still consider yourself a King to Scotland, then you must honor the clear will of its people: Scotland demands its freedom, and over three million Scots have already chosen me to lead them as their King. You cannot grant freedom with one hand while denying the very leader the Scottish people have chosen with the other. True freedom for Scotland is not a political deal under your terms or Westminster's; it is the recognition of my rightful Crown.

We both know that Her Late Majesty, Queen Elizabeth II, knowingly left behind private video recordings with me—not just as personal memories, but as final proof of the truth. She recorded these words so that when this day came, there would be no doubt about the rightful place of my Kingdom and the return of our House. For 70 years, Her Majesty served her people with deep devotion, and the public trusted her voice above all else. She said that if the truth was ever held back, these recordings should be shared directly with the nation she loved. And so, I invite you to respect her final wish, accept this historical truth, and walk a peaceful path with us. Let us fulfill her vision together—without having to release her video proof and leave the final judgment to the public.

My people and I truly believe that, as the King of England, you will not choose to take a hostile stand against the entire Scottish nation who have spoken their mind.

The choice before you is simple: respect the peaceful will of a nation, or force a fight against a united people. I ask you to choose wisdom, accept this truth, and walk a peaceful path with us—just as your mother always placed the peace and dignity of her people above all else.

THE ROYAL HOUSE OF STUART

And finally, to the people of Scotland: My fellow Scots, the chains of three centuries of silence are broken. Today, we do not just take back our throne; we take back our soul, who we are, and our future. For too long, our fate was decided in halls that do not know the spirit of our people.

For centuries, politicians gave you the empty promise of a 'Republic of Scotland.' I ask you to see one simple truth: Scotland, by its history and laws, cannot be a Republic. The politicians you voted for know this well. When they take office, they swear loyalty to the English Crown—a truth they hide from you. They held you back with false promises, while serving a system that is not ours.

I stand before you today to give you a royal promise as your King. Our Kingdom will never stand in the way of your freedom. We will never see you as subjects to be used. Our Crown will be the shield of our people's freedom. Under our reign, this ends: no leader you elect will ever bow to a foreign throne. From now on, every public servant will promise total loyalty to the people of Scotland alone.

You have stayed strong, you have waited, and you have kept the fire of our nation alive. The freedom we declare today is not a gift; it is your right. I ask you to stand together as the free and proud people of Scotland. Under the House of Stuart, we will build a nation where your voice is law, where our culture is our pride, and where our success belongs to us alone.

They wanted you to forget one truth, a truth that is the foundation of the Scottish Constitution, given to us by Robert the Bruce: Only the Scottish people can choose their King! So I ask you today:

Do you want a King with Scottish blood in his veins—or do you want to live under a foreign King?

Choosing your King is in your hands alone! Not in London, nor with the politicians serving a foreign Crown. So I call on you: Choose your King!

Let this be our vow: Never again will our freedom be sold. Never again will our future be ruled by others. And never again will Scotland stand in the shadow of any crown but her own. We are not English. We have never been English, and we never will be! We are Scots! We have always been Scots, and we will always be!

THE ROYAL HOUSE OF STUART

My fellow Scots,

I waited because I knew their power. But over the last seven years, we have prepared, and now we act.

Be ready: London may call me a traitor, as they did to my ancestors, Robert the Bruce and Queen Mary. They may even try to end my life...

But I will give them my ancestors' answer:

"It is not for glory, nor riches, that we fight, but for freedom—for that alone, which no true Scot gives up but with life itself."

*"In my end, is the beginning of our Kingdom. And today... today is that day.
Today is Scotland's Independence Day!"*

The Kingdom of Scotland is ours. The time is now. Long live Scotland!
